

Guidelines For Avoiding A Speeding Ticket

Speeding tickets are a pain to pay, but more of a pain to watch as insurance premiums balloon into larger amounts each time one is obtained. A speeding ticket can quickly make the most affordable insurance out of range for a driver- so it's best to learn how to fight and prevent speeding tickets where possible.

A nice technicality to keep in mind is the fact that if an officer can show up to a court date in which the driver obtains to contest the speeding ticket, the driver will usually win the case automatically. Rules differ depending on location, but this is an easy way for the majority of drivers to get off their speeding ticket with minimal effort. This is very true in the Summer, where vacations are taken even by cops- and missing a court date can't be avoided.

Sometimes the best way to avoid a speeding ticket is to remember to never admit guilt. Officers like to ask the question, "Do you know why I pulled you over?" and typically get a self-incriminating response. They can then record this, and present it in a court case to prove one's own guilt. As a result, consumers should always remain passive when answering questions, and save the real answers for the court room.

If the driver is dedicated enough, they can brush up on their law skills and request information from the officer he or she may not have. For instance, requesting details on when the speed radar used was last calibrated or even how the officer was trained on the device can yield results that might help the driver's case. Often times, information like this may not be available, and the driver stands good chance to win the case.

Drivers don't always have to suffer higher insurance premiums. If they do get a speeding ticket, and there is no possible chance of showing innocence, some areas allow for driving school to be enrolled in. This will essentially wipe the speeding ticket from one's record, but it costs extra and the expense of the speeding ticket is also to be paid. On top of this, it also requires a full Saturday to complete in most areas.

The best way to avoid a speeding ticket altogether is to avoid speed traps. Speed traps seek to trap drivers in unfair speeding ticket cases. As an example, a driver might be driving downhill and the speed limit may change by 10-20 miles per hour. If this occurs, the driver can't safely stop without applying much pressure to one's brakes. Most drivers will slowly put on their breaks, but then find out that a cop was waiting for this very event, and then get a speeding ticket as a result.

Final Thoughts

There is no reason that a driver can't get out of a speeding ticket, or at the very least wipe it from their record with alternative means. Follow the above steps to get the most out of the benefit the comes from wiping a speeding ticket from one's record- and enjoy the monetary benefits that result.
